MOZART'S SKULL LOST Curious Story of Its Discovery in 1801 and Its Disappearance in 1901. LONDON, June s - The skull of Mozart, or what was believed to be his skull, seems to have disappeared. The late Prof. Hyrtl of the Vienna University used to keep in his study a skull which he firmly believed to have been Mozart's, having inherited it, in ses, from his brother Jacob, an engraver. Herr Jacob Hyrtl received it from the n of the graveditger of the St. Marx Cemeery, who, in 1801, when a common grave was re-opened, recognized the shell in which he buried Mozart in 1721, took out the skull of the great composer, kept it, and bequeathed

Second Week of the Undermuslin Sale.

And the wonderful values are still here.

It has been a week of tremendous selling. Any ordinary stock would have been sadly broken by now - even our great sales in the past would have shown empty spaces in some lines. But we planned magnificently -no quantities could be too large when the staple qualities that bring regular prices here usually could be sold for less than they cost to make. Think of Men's Panama Hats From Peru---$6.00.

Fifty Hats-they have come to us just as they left the native makers' hands-just as the aristocratic South American gentleman wears his Panama. Blocked into one of the orthodox shapes, furnished with sweat band and black silk ribbon, they could not be bought for less than $12.00 to $20.00. This is our suggestion:

Buy Them as They Are and Block Them Yourself, or We Will Have Them Blocked for You.

They will mold into any shape you wish at a touch and keep it-you may have a Hat with individuality for half price or less. And already Panamas are a scarcity. These are shapely and handsome just as they are. And there will be no mistake as to the genuineness of your Panama if you wear one. Only fifty-they should be gone by night. A Frenchman's Telegraphic Invention Now Being Tested in England.

London, June 7.—Some important experiments in connection with a new telegraph system, which is said considerably to cheapen the cost of telegrams, have recently been conducted by the postal engineers between London and Glasgow.

The new apparatus is the invention of a French engineer named Mercadier, and by its means it is possible to send twelve separate messages over one wire at the same time. The system is also capable of being duplexed, by which twenty-four separate services he send twelve separate services he send twelve separate examples.

Added strength. They are then discharged throughs the twelve receivers. As each of the creation in the twelve receivers and send of a certain rate, they select each the currents belonging to its own particular message, but are impervious to all the others. By this means the messages are accurately successful, but were frequently interrupted by the bad weather. Eventually some parts of the apparatus failed and had to be returned to the inventor in Paris for repairs. On completion of these the experiments will be reasoned.

As the main cost of telegraphing is in the expense of erecting and maintaining lines, carrying capacity of the present wires cannot be exaggerated.

duplexed, by which twenty-four separate messages can be sent at one time over a single

The details of the apparatus are comparatively simple. The wire is attached at either end to twelve shorter wires, which lead in one case to twelve sending wires, and in another case to twelve receivers. At the sending end the currents are interrupted by twelve ranidly vibrating metal reeds, each reed vibrating at a different rate of speed. At the receiving end are twelve telephone receivers, with membranes of different thicknesses capable of vibrating at a certain rate, but at no other. The different rates of these receivers are identical with the rates of the reeds at the sending station.

When a message is sent, or when twelve separate messages are sent, what happens is this: The twelve currents enter the wire, each impressed with a distinct vibration rate. At the receiving station thay pass through a microphonic receiver, which gives them Cornelius N. Bliss and Mr. and Mrs. Perr. The details of the apparatus are compara-Belmont were passengers by the American liner St. Paul, in yesterday from Southampton and Cherbourg. Francis-Raudnitz-Paquin--Corne-these are some of the famous French dressmakers whose ideas have been copied, Americanized and in many cases improved upon in the collection of elegant Dresses which bring the most notable event of the season here to-morrow. Nothing could be more fashionable, more dainty or more desirable-nothing we could buy would sell more readily at full prices. It is then an unparalleled occasion which brings here the very pink of the season's production for prices which average much less than half. Indeed, so elegant are these Dresses that some of them have display in a window.

Values Are $15 to $40--Prices, $9.75 and $12.50

Linens, chambrays, crash, pique and poplinette—a fascinating list of materials. They are in the fashionable shades—oxblood, blue, tan and gray, exquisitely made and beautifully trimmed. Sizes 84, 86 and 38—you have great good fortune if you wear one of these.

The Great Half-Yearly Clearance of Carpets, Linoleums, Oilcloths, Mattings.

It has been a great Carpet season, a wonderful season even for the greatly enlarged space which the new Carpet Store occupies. We never had so many splendid Carpetings, never so many beautiful patterns here exclusively and we never could make prices so low as they have been this season. Now comes the cleaning up time. Immense selling has left many parts of rolls, other patterns of which there are full rolls will not be made again next season and stock taking is near at hand. So comes the semiannual event for which thousands of Brooklyn householders wait. 25,000 yards of this season's floor coverings are A Third to Half of the Old Low Prices.

There are all sorts of lengths in the Carpetings and there are many full rolls. In Oilcloths and the Linoleums there are some patterns with a hundred yards at the clearance price.
